Prtfaa. Thb Editor thinks it incumbent upon him to infonn the reader, that several, both ancient and modem Christians, haye contributed towards enriching this Treasury; and that he has not confined himself to anj particular sect of Christians, but, whereyer he found a passage among the old authors striking, instructiye, or encouraging to the people of God, has inserted it with great pleasure, and applied to friends for their illustration of particular points in diyinitj, which he thought were more immediately necessary for the information of common readers; not points of speculation, or doubtful interpretation, but what all allow are essential to the Christian Religion: such as Repentance, Faith, and Holiness. These friends readily favoured him with their snetiments; prompted, he doubts not, by the same generous motive, which, he trusts, actuates himself, the edification of the chil dren of God.
